High School Canada

Canada is popular as a destination for guest students. Going to high school in Canada sounds promising.

Canada is the second largest country in the world; however, large parts of it are in the sparsely populated north. Canada is divided into 13 provinces. People live mainly in the south of the country, especially in the southeast in the greater Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa areas.

Around 40 million inhabitants live in Canada. The standard of living is usually very high, and people are mostly doing well.

The education system is also good:

In the well-known „PISA test“, Canada regularly occupies one of the best places. Of course, there are differences between the schools here as well.

Canada is also popular with foreign students, with about 15,000 guest students coming to the country every year.

The education system is federal: In Canada, the provinces can decide on schools, lessons and curricula themselves.

While Canadian students do not have to pay school fees for state schools, foreign guest students have to pay school fees. Of course, this makes the program quite expensive in comparison. And in addition, the host families also receive a cost subsidy.

The host families are often extremely hospitable, open and interested in other people and cultures.
